I like to speak out, take charge, and direct the activities of others. I tend to be the leader in groups. Self-discipline - what many people call will-power - refers to the ability to persist at difficult or unpleasant tasks until they are completed. I am able to overcome reluctance to begin tasks and stay on track despite distractions. I feel enraged when things do not go my way. I am sensitive about being treated fairly and feel resentful and bitter when I feel I am being cheated.

My relationship is on solid ground. I've just moved beyond the "honeymoon" phase and into reality. That nervous, excited "heart-beating-faster" feeling has matured into a deeper, more stable connection, but that's okay really! If I'm having doubts, though, I try spending a little extra time nurturing my relationship and focusing on the intense friendship and romance I've developed. But chances are I'll adjust nicely and enjoy myself immensely!

I have a good sense of my sexuality and myself. I know how to turn on the sex appeal when it suits my needs, and have a fair amount of confidence when it comes to my sexual performance. I focus more on the emotional than the physical connection with my partner while having sex.

I'm going to need a nursery before too much longer. Because, despite a few lingering hesitations, I'm almost ready to change my name to "Mommy". But I still have concerns though, I'm worried about not knowing how to be a mom or that I might not be quite ready to turn my life upside down. But I try not to worry too much about the "not knowing what to do" part. As long as I've got maternal instincts and a great support network, the rest will come naturally. No one knows exactly what to do until they've actually got the baby in their arms.
